*O sea waves at Vigo,
have you seen my beloved?
God help me, is he coming?*

*O sea waves that swell,
have you seen my friend?
God help me, is he coming?*

*Have you seen my beloved
who makes my heart troubled?
God help me, is he coming?*

*Have you seen my friend
who makes my heart fret?
God help me, is he coming?*

[English Translation by Richard Zenith]

*Ondas do mar de Vigo,
se vistes meu amigo?
e ai Deus, se verá cedo?*

*Ondas do mar levado,
se vistes meu amado?
e ai Deus, se verá cedo?*

*Se vistes meu amigo,
o por que eu sospiro?
e ai Deus, se verá cedo?*

*Se vistes meu amado,
o por que hei gram coidado?
e ai Deus, se verá cedo?*

1. Las Islas Cíes, Galicia, Spain

Mention Spanish beaches and most people instinctively think of the Mediterranean. Yet the wilder, stunning Atlantic coastline of Galicia, just north of Portugal, has far more dramatic praias - with far fewer people on them. One of the jewels of this coast is on Las Islas Cíes, a 40-minute boat trip from the pretty town of Baiona. Once a pirates' haunt, Cíes is now an uninhabited and pristine national park, open to the public only in summer. Galegos come here to spend long, lazy summer days on the Praia das Rodas, a perfect crescent of soft, pale sand backed by small dunes sheltering a calm lagoon of crystal-clear sea.

Locals call this their "Caribbean beach", and the water is turquoise enough, the sand white enough to believe the comparison ... until you dip your toe in the water. Then it feels more like Skegness. You can sleep in an idyllic campsite, shaded by tall pine trees, with a view over the ocean. And, this being Spain, there's even a proper restaurant serving great seafood.

Where to stay: Camping Islas Cíes is open Easter week and June-September.
